

Restricting Access to Thesis Form

The University of Surrey is a designated public authority under the Freedom of Information Act 2000. This Act gives a general right of access to all information held by the University, including information held in the SRI Open Access repository, such as your e-thesis.

There are a number of exemptions allowed under the Freedom of Information Act 2000, which can be used to request an 'embargo', i.e. restricting the public from accessing your e-thesis. The exemptions, along with corresponding embargo periods (how long a restriction may last), are listed on the Restricting Access Form below.

If you wish to make a request using one or more of the exemptions listed, you must complete the Restricting Access Form, and talk to your principal supervisor who will be required to sign this form to indicate that the supervisory team agree with your decision on restricting access to your thesis. If the exemption concerns a patent or a commercial interest, the form must also be sent to the Director of Technology Transfer for consideration.

You must indicate in the space provided in the form, which exemption you are claiming and why you feel an exemption is applicable. However, if a specific request for your thesis is received prior to the expiration of any applicable embargo, the University is still obligated to consider the request and act in compliance with the Act. Compliance may include disclosure of your thesis.

The form should be submitted to the principal supervisor at the time of completing the Entry Form for Examination, so that there is ample time for your request to be considered prior to the submission of your final thesis (i.e. the 'Version of Record' as approved by the examiners). Once signed, scan and save the form and keep the file safe. You will need to upload and deposit it along with the Author Deposit Agreement and your final thesis into SRI Open Access.

Restrictions are usually granted for a limited period of time – normally up to a maximum of three years – but can be considered for renewal on request.

If the request is applied to your thesis, your thesis will not be made available for public access until the embargo has expired. However, the title of your thesis and abstract (the metadata) will be made available via the University e-theses repository: SRI Open Access repository and EThOS, the British Library Electronic Theses Online Service.

Candidate declaration:

I wish to restrict public access to my Thesis on the grounds of exemption(s) allowed under the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

The following exemptions may apply to my material (please provide details):

The material is due for publication or I am actively seeking to publish this material (Section 22).

Embargo period: 1 year

The journal we are submitting to (Autism) will under certain circumstances consider dissertations as prior publication (please see: <https://us.sagepub.com/en-us/nam/prior-publication>) As a PsychD Clinical thesis is different to a PhD thesis in that it is a portfolio of research work which contains, amongst other things, a literature review paper and an empirical paper. The literature review and empirical papers are written as journal articles and are prepared with a target journal in mind. Therefore, publications arising from a PsychD Clinical thesis are likely to be very similar in format and content to a published journal article. I am actively seeking to publish this material and, therefore, request a 1 year embargo period. Immediate open access to my thesis might jeopardise publication in a journal.

The material includes information that was obtained under a promise of confidentiality (section 41).

Embargo period: 3 years
